

Join the Editorial Board of plaNext—Next Generation Planning!

plaNext is an international open-access peer-reviewed journal devoted to young academics within planning and other related fields. It is managed by the Young Academics Network of AESOP, publishing high-quality and original research. The fundamental approach taken by plaNext is to provide prospective authors an opportunity to engage their ideas in international planning debates as well as to make their research available to the wider planning audiences.

New members: roles and responsibilities plaNext is growing and seeks to recruit Editor-in-Chief and four editorial board members. Together, the Editorial Board actively manages the review process, peer review papers, and publish research findings in plaNext. The Editorial Board works through a lively and informal process and the new members are expected to have the same spirits.

Editor-in-chief, through collaboration with the editorial board, is responsible for coordinating all matters of the journal including the operational and other policy-related matters. Among other tasks: strategic planning; final decisions on special volumes; monitoring the publication process, employment of the ethical policy, writing editorial texts.

The editorial board members are to manage the publication processes as well as to advise and support the Editor-in-Chief. Among their tasks, managing special volumes when needed; monitoring the review process; reviewing manuscripts; direct contact with authors.

By joining plaNext's editorial board you will become part of AESOP extended network, gain invaluable experiences in academic publication, and make a direct contribution to planning debates.

Application: documents and deadline

A4-page motivation letter explaining your interest, the contribution you would like to make to plaNext, and your academic publishing experience. Please e-mail your application to planextjournal@gmail.com, with the subject 'plaNext Editorial Board Application 2022', no later than 30th of August 2022.

We look forward to receiving your application.

plaNext Editorial Board

planextjournal@gmail.com